

Tri-State Area No-Kill Shelters & Rescues

These no-kill* shelters manage their admissions, which means they can choose to take an animal or not, depending on space, resources, etc. TIPS: All shelters and rescues are overwhelmed, but often a donation or offer to help with vetting costs can allow a group the ability to take on another animal. Can you foster or help with supplies? Ask the rescue what would help them the most. (*no-kill = min 90% save rate benchmark)

Open Admission Shelters take animals from their county

An open-admission shelter admits every stray and/or surrendered animal from within its jurisdiction. This type of shelter may be legally obligated by a municipal mandate or contract to admit every animal, or it may choose to be open admission according to its own organizational mission and policies. They do not promise to be no-kill and do their best with the limited resources available to them. Open-admission shelters have to make extremely difficult choices. They are responsible for making sure that animals adopted out of their shelter are safe to be in public. Open-admission shelters also have limited space and cannot say no to an animal. At times, they have no more space for animals and again have to make difficult decisions to euthanize based on space alone.
